

Report on Supply Chain Compliance Volume 2, Number 19. October 10, 2019 Sino-US and EU-US trade wars continue to cause hardship for manufacturers

By Sascha Matuszak

The year-long trade conflict between the U.S. and China has caused a number of economic casualties. [1] North American farmers have struggled, as they watched their primary market for soy and pork disappear, [2] but manufacturers across all sectors have suffered. [3]

Although large retailers, such as Target Corporation, have vowed to pass on new costs to their suppliers, ^[4] as opposed to consumers, other companies have reacted in different ways. Electronics companies have sought to diversify and shift supply chains away from China ; while U.S. manufacturers that predicted heavy sales — such as the automotive, electronics and raw material sectors — are finding ways to curb excess supply and not get stuck with a glut of inventory, now that China is not as viable a market. Thousands of companies have applied for exemptions from tariffs. ^[7]

This document is only available to subscribers. Please log in or purchase access.

Purchase Login