

CEP Magazine – November 2020

Proposed Australian media law has Big Tech worried

By Sascha Matuszak

A proposed regulation, currently in draft form, seeks to create a level playing field for Australian news media organizations and global technology companies such as Google and Facebook. The News Media and Digital Platforms Mandatory Bargaining Code regulation^[1] would require^[2] large tech companies to, among other things, provide information on how and when Google and Facebook make available the user data collected through interactions with news content.

This document is only available to members. Please log in or become a member.

Become a Member Login