I had planned to devote this month's column to a discussion of how organizations identify new compliance risks, avoiding the problems associated with simply reassessing the same old risks every year. But something came along that surprised me.

In April, SCCE & HCCA held its first two-day Compliance Risk Assessment & Management workshop aimed at providing a deeper dive into the compliance risk assessment process. I think we hit an important need for the membership, as more than 160 people attended this virtual event, of which almost half were from healthcare organizations. That's not what surprised me.
